Virtute me Involvo. ——— ——— Hor.

Good conscience is to the soul what health is to the body; it preserves a constant ease and serenity within us, and more than countervails all the calamities and afflictions which can possibly befall us. I know nothing so hard for a generous mind to get over as calumny and reproach, and cannot find any method of quieting the soul under them, besides this single one, of our being conscious to ourselves that we do not deserve them.

I have been always mightily pleased with that passage in Don Quixote, where the fantastical knight is represented as loading a gentlemen of good sense with praises and eloguims, upon which the gentleman makes this reflection to himself: How grateful is praise to human nature. I cannot forbear being secretly pleased with the commendations I receive, tho' I am sensible it is a madman bestows them upon me. In the same manner tho' we are often sure that the censures which are passed upon us are uttered by those who know nothing of us, and have neither means nor abilities to form a right judgment of us, we cannot forbear being grieved at what they say.

In order to heal this infirmity, which is so natural to the best and wisest of men. I have taken a particular pleasure in observing the conduct of the old Philosophers, how they bore themselves up against the malice and detraction of their Enemies.

The way to silence calumny, says Elian, is to be always exercised in such things as are praise worthy. Socrates, after having received sentence, told his friends, that he had always accustomed himself to regard truth and not censure, and he was not troubled at his condemnation because he knew himself free from guilt. It was in the same spirit that he heard the accusations of his two great adversaries, who had uttered against him the most virulent reproaches. Anytus and Melitus, says he, may procure sentence against me, but they cannot hurt me. This divine Philosopher was so well fortified in his own innocence, that he neglected all the impotence of evil tongues which were engaged in his destruction. This was properly the support of a good Conscience, that contradicted the reports which had been raised against him, and cleared him to himself.

From the Daily Gazetteer, October 5. To the FOOL.

From my Chambers in the Royal Oak Marshalsea Prison.

THE inclosed came wrapt about my Breakfast, Dinner and Supper, (which was a Pennyworth of Cheese) last Sunday; and observing the subject Matter to be in Verse, I peep'd into it; finding it an odd Subject, and handled in a droll Manner, I have presented it to you, hoping you will give it a Place in your Paper, which, I doubt not, will please many of your constant Readers.

Upon one Mr. Day, at the Sign of the Horse-Shoe, who laid the Key under the Door, and out-ran, or rather run out his Landlord.

HERE Night and Day conspire a cozening Flight,
For Day (they say) is run away by Night.
For Day is past, why, Landlord, where's your Rent?
You might have seen the Day was almost spent.
Day sold, and pawn'd, and put off what he might,
Tho' it were ne'er so dark, Day would be light.
You had one Day a Tenant, and would fain
Your Eyes might one Day see that Day again.
No, Landlord, no, you now may truly say,
And to your Cost too, you have lost a Day.
Day is departed, in a Mist, I fear;
For Day is broke, yet doet not Day appear,
From Sun to Sun are the set Times of Play;
But you should have been up by Break of Day:
Yet, if you had, you had got nothing by't,
For Day was cunning, and broke over Night:
His fiery Prancers made the Welkin roar;
One Horse for Haste has left a Shoe at Door,
Whose gilded Nails do with such Lustre shine,
He that comes next will have it for a Sign.
His pale face now does Day in Owl-light shrowd,
Truth is, at present, Day's under a Cloud.
Day, like a Candle, is gone out, and where,
None knows, except to th' other Hemisphere:
And yet, who trusted him for any Sum
Might have their Money, if the Day were come:
But Day is fled, and left our Hopes in Night:
Now, Cynic, now, Lanthorn, and Candle-Light:
Then to the Tavern; Landlord, let's away;
Chear up your Heart; hang't, 'tis a broken Day:
And for your Rent, never thus rend your Soul,
Ere long you'll see Day at a little Hole;
Look at the Compter when you go that Way
Early enough, and you'll see Peep of Day.
But how now, Landlord, what's the Matter, pray?
What, can't you sleep, you do so long for Day?
Have you a mind, Sir, to arrest the Day?
There's no such Serjeant as a Joshua.
Put off your Passions, pray; true, 'tis a Sum;
But, don't you know that a Pay-day will come?
I'll warrant you, do you but banish Sorrow,
My Life for yours, Day comes again To-morrow.

BOSTON, January 28.

A FEW days ago, a man lately taken prisoner by the Indians at the Eastward, arrived here from Canada, who informs, that as the French were lately launching a ship of 64 guns at Quebec, she overset and was bilged; upon which they immediately set up another in her room, of the same rate. He also informs, that he left 17 of our people in Canada, all taken by the Indians in their last excursions in the Eastern parts.
